Mrs. Fairfield is at the City Hotel, and her husband is anxious to dispose of a new work, entitled "The Fairfields," a volume of tales which has met with great success. It is a most able cotemporary. The Boston paper says of Mrs. Fairfield: "An extraordinary lady, whose life, trials, and sufferings have made her so generally known, and who, as yesterday, with a beautiful volume of her accomplished daughters, Genevieve and Gertrude, is now at the City Hotel."

lady is a native of New Jersey, and of English ancestry. She is a niece of the late architect, John Frazer, Esq., whose genius and talents have long been known by many of the best of art in our city—several of whose pictures adorn the Athenaeum at this place. The busts of Webster, and Perkins, and Adams, and Dr. Bowditch, are all, with many others, the work of his genius.

Field was married, in 1830, to the lady, Elizabeth, whose name is so familiarly known to the admirers of his genius in this country. She is of Massachusetts, his native State.

We do not speak of this lady with the intention of giving a sketch of her life, for a life like his

The history of her troubles is more a life of romance than a story of real life.
